

IRRIGATES BRAIN IN NEW CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA

Dr. Van Gieson Pleased With Experiments Along a
New Line.

EXPERIMENTS ON DOGS.

Hole Drilled in Skull and Anti-
Toxin Injected Directly Into Great Nerve Centre.

Seeking a cure for rabies, Dr. Ira Van Gieson, of the Board of Health's Research Laboratory, has just completed a number of experiments along a new line. His theory is that as the brain is the seat of rabies, a direct application of anti-toxin into the brain will effect a cure.

To prove that the serum can be introduced into the brain through a hole in the skull without injurious effects, he has been the object of a number of experiments under the direction of Dr. Van Gieson at the laboratory.

After the virus from a rabid dog has been injected into the human system it is conducted through the nerves into the brain. After this had been demonstrated by scientists it was plain why symptoms of hydrophobia developed more quickly in persons bitten on the face than in those bitten on the body or limbs.

The Mode of Treatment.
The only successful method of treating rabies, Dr. Van Gieson decided, after establishing these facts, lay in treating the brain itself, something not heretofore attempted. To carry on his experiments the city's hydrophobia expert, who is Dr. Van Gieson, secured a number of dogs. The first experiments were in brain irrigation. It was a comparatively new field, because medical science has done very little in direct medication of the brain tissue.

"We found first," said Dr. Van Gieson, "that by doing it drop by drop we could inject from twelve to eighteen cubic centimetres of a normal salt solution with a hypodermic syringe through a small hole cut in the dog's skull."

"Next a colored solution was tried to obtain the extent of the irrigation, and when a post mortem examination was made of the dog's brain it was discovered that the porous brain substance had in every part become permeated with the color, which even ran down the spinal cord."

This, you understand, was all to prove that the brain would take up and disseminate a fluid injected into it through an aperture cut in the skull. Our experiments showed that we could thus reach every part of the brain, and actual experiments for rabies proper were then undertaken.

Prolonged Dog's Life.
"We had a valuable dog suffering from genuine rabies. Opening its skull we injected into the brain a solution of the Pasteur serum. The disease had progressed pretty far, and the dog eventually died from it, but the treatment prolonged its life four days, which inspires the belief that a cure by that method is possible."

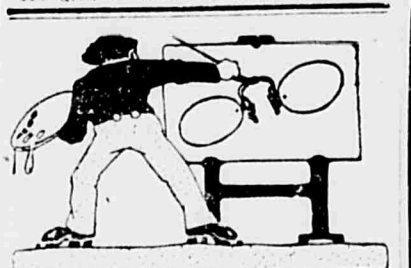

"I am so confident that the treatment will be successful that in the case of a human being suffering from hydrophobia I would have no hesitation in using it, should the opportunity appear. As it has been, death is certain for the victim. With this new treatment there is at least a chance of a cure."

"The only thing now required, and on which experts are now working, is the proper preparation of the serum, to obtain the best results by introducing it into the brain."

Dr. Van Gieson explained his discovery to the Medical-Legal Society at the Waldorf last night, and several others joined in a discussion of rabies, one person advocating the use of skunk cabbage as an effective remedy.

CLAIMS $2,500,000 ESTATE.

Woman Sues for Fortune of Man Dead Forty Years.
SANTA BARBARA, Cal., June 18.—Dominga Schiappa Pietra has filed a suit against the heirs of the late Leopold Pietra, of Los Angeles, claiming one-half of an estate valued at $2,500,000, on the grounds that she is the common law wife of Frederico Pietra, an Italian immigrant who laid a foundation for the immense fortune. He died in this city forty years ago.
